

Welcoming Address

By State Minister
Prof. Bausback

at the Nuremberg Moot Court

on July 26, 2017

in Nuremberg, Germany

Please check against delivery.

Dear Mrs. Bayerlein,
dear Moot Court participants,
members of the jury,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

“Attack by the self-proclaimed ‘Islamic State’
before the German Embassy in Afghanistan!”

“North Korea’s Dictator Kim Jong-Un conducts another nuclear bomb test!”

“Erdogan has leading journalists in Turkey arrested!”

Ladies and Gentlemen!

The newspaper headlines we read these days are not pretty. This news is alarming, consternating and unsettling.

After the end of the Cold War between Russia and the USA, optimism spread throughout the western world. We had the impression that the world would change for the better.

Sometimes it seems as if we had been mistaken back then. The stream of horrific news is never-ending, and new flashpoints pop up over and over again.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

But there is something else that we do not want to—and indeed shouldn't—conceal: There are definitely many places on this earth that give us reason to hope. Just think, for example, of the Peace Accord, recently signed by the government and Farc in Colombia following many years of horror.

Nevertheless, I am firmly convinced that the significance of international penal law as a peacekeeping instrument will rise rather than fall.

You,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

are the judges of the future. In the medium term, your generation of law professionals will rule on what is genocide, what is a war crime, what is a crime against humanity—and what isn't.

You thus shoulder enormous responsibility.

Therefore, it is wonderful that you are dedicating yourselves to international penal law at an early stage in your careers.

As is so often the case in life, theory is not everything in this field, either.

Public speaking in court, quick reactions to questions, argumentative finesse and repartee are skills young jurists simply cannot acquire early enough.

Here at the Nuremberg Moot Court, you learn and hone these skills almost playfully. Unlike later in practice, you can afford to make a mistake once in a while, without it having real consequences for the parties involved.

Address!

There is no better venue for the Nuremberg Moot Court than Room 600 of the Nuremberg Courthouse, in which we find ourselves today.

This is where the Nuremberg Trials took place, at which the 'Charter of the International Military Tribunal' was applied for the first time. This is why this courtroom is considered the birthplace of international penal law.

Even back then—more than 70 years ago—one thing was absolutely clear: international penal law can only develop and be applied effectively if nations work together. As they are doing these days at the Moot Court.

Address!

I would like to take this opportunity up-front to express my high regard for all of the participants!

Trying and pleading a fictitious case under international penal law as one would before the International Court of Justice and drafting briefs and preparing summations for such a trial is a herculean task!

Given this challenging subject matter, the preparatory work alone has definitely demanded a lot of energy, dedication and time of you.

I think it is outstanding that you have taken on the toils of being involved with the Moot Court!

And I am sure that you will all take home something valuable! Not just from a professional point of view as budding legal professionals, but also for yourselves as individuals.

I wish you all an enjoyable time and the best of success!

Thank you for your attention.
